

21 Food Descriptions by ANTHONY BOURDAIN

- “As incredible as it might seem, you can cook beaver really, really well.”
- “This dish is the single best reason for sharing a border with Germany.”
- “Those are the size of freaking clown shoes” (Japan – describing oysters)
- “...roasted pork belly... which pretty much any sensible person would love.”
- “A real shrimp cocktail the way Jesus wants you to eat them”
- “There is both grilled and not. And both with lots of salsa options.”
- “A giant crab claw practically the size of a catcher’s mitt.”
- “Oh wow. That looks good. That is exciting. What is it?”
- “A mutant concoction consisting of gin, beer, wine and Sprite.”
- “Beans and rice, that’s fucking awesome.”
- “That’s where the good Sh*t is buried. You really gotta work for it.”
- “That fish sauce with chilis in it.... whoaa that’ll just singe your eyes off.”
- “Clams with pork cracklings? How could that not be good?”
- “Um waiter, there’s something sharp in my soup.”
- “It’s the spicy, sensualist heartland of all the things I love about China... food that can burn you down to a charred, smoking little stump.”
- “The dish, in practical terms, is a game of finding the bits of chicken in the mountain of ass-burning goodness. C’mon, it’s fun for the whole family.”
- “As it cooks down, it gets stronger and stronger, and the heat, more intense: a delicious yet unpredictable silt of spice gathering at the bottom of this river of hot lava.”
- “That’s pure sugar. Oh wow, my teeth are rotting right out of my head. I might go into diabetic shock here.”
- “I think we learned something today: only Texans and Jews understand brisket.”
- “I’ve never had barbecue this moist. It’s supernatural.”
- ...and a cold local beer”
